The opera was Danczstli's Don Jottings on the Memphis, Helof some of our oldest and most influential Pasquale, with the following east: M'ue Durand as "Norina," Signor Petrilli, as "Doctor Malatests," Signor Sarti, as "Din Pasquale," Signor Locatelli, as "the Notary," Signor Brignoli, in his famous part of "Ernesto," When we take into consideration the circumstances under which it was given the entertainment, in an artistic point of view, was a success highly creditable to all parties. The troups arrived at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and were tired out with a long journey over uncomfortable roads. Nothing of this, however, was of now a-days, yet a sensation of twenty wonderful than the Stamese twins. She shown in the performance. Of the prima donna, M'lle Durand, we hardly know years ago. donna, M'lie Durand, we hardly know how to express curselves sufficiently in praise without appearing fuisome. Her personel is exquisitely plassing, and her voice is a pure coprano, highly trained, and managed most artistically and admirably. She is altogether a most charming young artiste, and carried all hearts by storm. Of Signer Brignoll it is almost superfluous to epeak. He is almost superfluous to epeak. He is rightly denominated the prince of tenors. The role of "Ernesto" does not give much scape for a voice like his, but even there it rang as only his voice can, full and round, as sonorous as bronze, and as clear and sweet as silver. The baritage of the proposed for the distant grave in which he siesps, the workings of less than a quarter of a hundred years would doubtless be beyond all his ardent hopes and of the st. The baritone, Signot Petrilli, as the miscourial Railroad, conceived in the brain of the tone, Signot Petrilli, as the marcurial "Dr. Maiatesta," was most happly received, the natural fun of the man siding not a little to his success as an artist. His voice is a noble one, and he knows how to manage it. Signori Sartiand Locatelli showed themseives finished actors and fine vocalisis, and were well received throughout. The quartette in the second act was londly encored, and rendered a second time to increased acrolature. The "Tower Seene" from the management of the brain of the litustrious James C. Jones, and rushed with velocipede thou to completion by the indomitable Sum Tate, would seem in its projection to have taken a century to have taken a century to have united the "Atlantic with the Mississippi;" but to day finds it recorded so, and "fron bars" bind, with all its great cities of ocean and river.
